State of the Region – How to Remain Prosperous in Times of Global Turmoil

The regional context has changed dramatically over the past twelve months. The global financial crisis and the weakened global demand have caused economic slowdown in all parts of the Baltic Sea Region – and a financial meltdown in Iceland and, to some degree, in Russia. The Baltic tigers are in or close to recession. The German economy is losing momentum, and the pressure on the relatively resilient Nordic countries is rising. Still the Baltic Sea Region has been holding up better than other areas of Europe and the world economy overall, yet new political initiatives are needed. Can the upcoming EU Strategy on the Baltic Sea Region play a positive role to the Region's competitiveness?

Energize the Future! – Northern Europe's Energy Map of Tomorrow

Many countries have developed their national strategies on how to reach EU energy policy targets but little emphasis is put on regional cooperation and joint initiatives that could optimise the national strategies. How to improve the integration of energy systems and coordination of development plans in the Baltic Sea Region for enhanced regional cooperation – through existing or non-existing frameworks. Who could take the leading role? Discussions will be inspired by the pre-conclusions of BDF's project on Enhanced Energy Cooperation – Future Scenarios and Opportunities for the Baltic Sea Region.

How to Cope with Baltic Sea Challenges

Adopted in 2007, the Helsinki Commission Action Plan for the Baltic Sea, identifies a series of actions to be taken in order to halt the contamination of the world's most polluted sea. Yet, alarming reports are identifying ongoing deterioration of the water quality. Is the political commitment enough – or does the situation call for other types of measures?

Innovation in Globalised Markets

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

Europe is lagging behind its international competitors when it comes to innovation. In parallel, the Baltic Sea Region is one of the strongest innovation hubs in the global economy but over the last years the Region has fallen behind international peers – patenting in the EU shows this tendency. To be effective, innovation strategies should embrace dynamics at different levels: global/multinational, regional, and company level. Can the EU strategy for the Baltic Sea Region facilitate the different perspectives?

Taking the Internal Market to the Next Level

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

The single market of the EU is under review and modernisation. The objective is to better face the change related to globalisation, the role of the knowledge economy and services and the changing dynamics related to the larger and more diverse EU of 27. The improved instruments could build more on best practice and foster greater trust on which the system of mutual recognition is built. Could the EU-strategy for the Baltic Sea Region become a laboratory of the EU where new approaches are being tested with the objective to increase competitiveness? If so, what should its priorities be and how to proceed?

The young people of today are born in the age of globalisation with a global mindset. The future of tomorrow will be defined and controlled by these young people. ## Two Countries – One Region!

Eights years after the construction of the bridge connecting Copenhagen and Malmo, the Oresund Region's cross-border integration and growth rates have literally boomed. Due to the ever rising number of commuters crossing the bridge, a regional labour – and housing market has evolved. These numbers have immense impact on the surrounding infrastructure, business locations, investments and community services in the coming years. How do the regional actors respond to the fast development? Can the lessons learned be transferred to other cross-border regions in the Baltic Sea Region?

Why Entrepreneurs...? Agents of Competitiveness and Change

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

Entrepreneurs are today's agents of competitiveness and change. They are some of the main contributors to competitiveness and prosperity, in general, of an area. Regrettably, they are strongly affected by administrative barriers, which are not in line with the EU principles of free movement of labour, capital, services and products in the Internal Market. They struggle with heavy burdens both when setting up a business and once the business has been established. The objective of the workshop is to focus on what measures have to be taken to improve framework conditions for entrepreneurs, and hereby improve competitiveness of the Baltic Sea Region. How can the EU Strategy for the Baltic Sea Region assist entrepreneurs?

Development of a 5th Freedom in the European Union: Can the Baltic Sea Region Be a Frontrunner?

Following the four existing freedoms in the EU, the cross border movement of goods, services, capital and people, the 5th freedom – the free movement of knowledge – is yet to be realised. To succeed, knowledge and researchers must be able to move freely from one region to another; from one country to another, from academia to industry and vice versa. How do we connect the research environment in the Baltic Sea Region, exchanging ideas, experiences and research results, and how do we further strengthen the interaction between research, business and politics?

Russia Today and Tomorrow – A Changing Political and Economic Landscape

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

Tighter economic integration between Russia and the rest of the Baltic Sea Region represents a large economic opportunity, although Northwest Russia is underperforming slightly Russia's high growth rates. The smooth transition to the Medvedev-Putin administration created hopes for stabilization but a number of political events and significant drop in the Russian stock market have led to significant change in sentiments. What are the present outlooks? Will closer economic integration happen – in parallel with the EU-strategy for the Baltic Sea Region – despite political differences?

Climate Change of Business – Towards an Integrated Baltic Sea Region Energy Market

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

A well-functioning and a well-integrated energy market, as well as a safe security of supply, are prerequisites for a competitive, strong Baltic Sea Region. This session will address the concrete needs of the industry from the point of view of energy suppliers and customers, who are increasing with demand for green energy. It will elaborate on how Northern Europe's energy scene can be improved into a fully-fledged, open energy market. Business leaders from the energy sector will discuss how the Baltic Sea Region can be made into the strongest economic hub for energy and climate in the world.

Energy, Innovation and Regional Clusters

Innovation is crucial to finding new energy sources and perfecting already existing ones. R&D, as well as the commercialisation of new technologies, has to be accelerated. Competencies are often kept in small and rather closed circles within big energy companies. In order to act tomorrow, we have to prepare the capacity and the framework conditions today, keeping in mind that the Baltic Sea Region, due to its variety of energy competencies has huge potential for developing a showcase for innovative energy solutions. The session will shed light on necessary measures and incentives to take to achieve an improved innovation platform in Northern Europe.

Intelligent Labour Management – Speeding up Regional Mobility

Part of the round table on how to make the Baltic Sea Region a prosperous place

The Baltic Sea Region continues to register global competitive advantages on productivity, high-skilled labour force, strong clusters, innovation etc. An active, flexible and mobile labour force is an important prerequisite for further economic progress; however demographic development, inflexible labour markets, high taxes, strict migration policies and strong competitive labour markets outside the Region are hampering growth. New perspectives on immigration and new labour market reforms are called for.

Future Scenarios of Energy Cooperation: Combining Intelligent Regional Solutions

In order to gain political momentum when searching for intelligent regional solutions, different scenarios will have to be developed by engaging a multitude of stakeholders from public and private sector in the Baltic Sea Region. The purpose of the workshop is to demonstrate how solutions to different energy challenges can be developed and optimised through enhanced regional integration and projects. Based on the preliminary findings of the report on cooperation in the Baltic Sea Region, the workshop will address possible scenarios.

Summit Endnote Session

New Conditions, Regional Ambitions – Priorities and Governance

The Baltic Sea Region has witnessed an impressive revitalisation of cooperation and debate on almost all levels. The driver is the EU Strategy and specific regional challenges, not least the polluted sea, energy security and growth strategies. To fulfil expectations, many questions need to be addressed: What agenda for a more prosperous and competitive BSR is needed? How to deal with Russia – a regional economic partner or political spoiler? And finally the institutional question: Is the mixture of multilevel and horizontal governance in the BSR effective to implement the EU strategy for the region – or too weak to promote regionalization of Europe?
